UKLA is a registered charity, which has as its sole object the advancement of education in literacy.

We aim to inform all those concerned with the development of language, literacy and communication, encouraging them in reflection and dialogue, supporting their practice and giving public voice to their concerns.

UKLA has a range of memberships starting at just £30.

"I've been teaching for 20 years but joining UKLA completely changed the way I see things. The community is incredibly supportive and friendly and this connection with other passionate teachers is both inspiring and enriching, personally and professionally. The opportunities that have been offered have been numerous, from joining a group shadowing the UKLA book awards, to writing an article for the association magazine. The stimulation of this kind of activity has led to my teaching developing to deeper levels - and the best part of all is that the children I work with every day are enjoying the benefits of the up-to-the-minute research and practice from which I am learning too! It really is no exaggeration that joining UKLA transformed my teaching life."
